THE ÆOLIAN

IS ENDORSED AND RECOMMENDED BY THE World's Greatest Musicians!!!

THE ÆOLIAN, described as briefly as possible, is an Instrument resembling an Upright Piano or Organ, which anyone HAVING NO KNOWLEDGE OF MUSIC WHATEVER can play with perfect expression, tone, and tempo, ANY PIECE OF MUSIC EVER WRITTEN.

Imagine anyone who cannot tell one note from another sittting down and playing at once a BEETHOVEN SYMPHONY with all its beautiful changes of tempo and harmony! It seems incredible, but that it CAN be done is an absolute fact; and not only can a Symphony be played, but Operatic Selections, Overtures, Wagner's excerpts—in fact, anything, from a Ballad or Waltz to the most classical composition.

It can be played by ANY MEMBER of your family, whether musically educated or not, and AS AN EDUCATOR it stands UNRIVALLED for young musicians. By this Instrument they will be made conversant with good music in a manner impossible on any other instrument.

The Æolian is also provided with a key-board, upon which musicians can play in the ordinary manner.

The Catalogue of Music embraces some thousands of different selections, and these are added to daily. All new Music is immediately added—the latest Waltz, the newest Song, or selections from the latest Opera.

Preface

THE prominent feature of WHITAKER'S NAVAL AND MILITARY DIRECTORY has been modelled with a view to enabling inquirers to be completely and immediately successful in their search for the name, rank, station, age, and war services of Officers on the Active List of the Navy, Army, and Royal Marines. These particulars, only procurable hitherto after an exhaustive search through many high-priced volumes, have been collected from a multitude of sources and will be found in the ALPHABETICAL LIST, which forms the largest and most important section of the present work. This list takes the place of an Index in, it is claimed, a highly advantageous manner; for, when the name has been found, further search is entirely unnecessary, since all the particulars are presented at the same moment.

The earlier portion of the book contains a history and sketch of the ROYAL NAVY from the pen of Mr. William Laird Clowes, and a similar account of the ARMY from a well-known officer on the Active List. A treatise on Naval and Military PRECEDENCE and Relative Rank, and other matters connected with the Services, together with a descriptive list of Naval and Military MEDALS, will also be found in the Introductory portion.

The NAVY LIST contains all the ships of the Navy, with particulars of the date of their completion, number of guns, speed, tonnage, horse-power, and complement, with a list of officers serving upon each, a list of Flag officers on the Active List, with their squadrons in cases where a command is held, and the staffs of the different departments.

In the ARMY LIST will be found the various Regiments and other units of the service, with their officers, and the principal staff officers of the several commands at home and abroad; militia and volunteer battalions, &c., are included, with their respective commanding officers and adjutants.

The INDIAN SECTION contains the Native Army, the Hyderabad Contingent, and the various Local Corps under the orders of the Government, together with the Regiments of the Volunteer Force.

The compilation of the book has entailed continuous and arduous labour, and every effort has been made to ensure accuracy throughout; in view of this it is hoped that any shortcoming may be pardoned.

Corrections and suggestions for the improvement of the Directory will be thankfully received, and the co-operation of all who are interested in the work is earnestly solicited.

Introduction.

THE ROYAL NAVY.

THE history of the Navy, upon which, under the good providence of God, the peace, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and her dominions chiefly depend, is one that can hardly be said to have any definite beginning. England early discovered her need of a fleet; and she may be said to have had fleets, raised to meet the exigencies of the moment, long before she had a Navy, which was, in any sense of the word, a standing force. The nucleus of this standing force will be found in the private vessels of the monarch for the time being—in other words, in what were called the Ships Royal. The king of England had from a very early period the right to call upon certain of his subjects, notably upon the Barons of the Cinque Ports, to furnish for his use, under specified conditions and for specified periods, a given number of craft, which could be used for war. But these craft were not, as a rule, warships. Built for mercantile purposes, they formed but a makeshift navy at the best. Thus it happened that English kings at length found it desirable to be able to command the services of at least a few thoroughly efficient fighting ships, in addition to the improvised warships furnished to them in their hour of need by the merchants and the ports. They consequently either built such ships for themselves or purchased them abroad. Whereas the vessels of the Cinque Ports and of private owners were primarily trading ships, the vessels of the sovereign were primarily men-of-war. In the hour of action, therefore, they became the core and backbone of the fighting fleets which put to sea to meet the enemies of the country.

There was, no doubt, a Royal Navy of a modest sort before the accession of King John. William I., on the occasion of the Conquest, had his own ship, the Mora; his immediate successors had each his "esnecca," or armed yacht, and probably other vessels as well; and Richard I. had his favourite galley of war, the Trench-the-Mer. But it is clear that some considerable developments of the King's Navy took place under John, who had not only many galleys of his own, but also basins and storehouses for them at Portsmouth, and who, in 1213, appointed his natural brother, William de Longespée, Earl of Salisbury, to be Commander-in-Chief of his fleet. From the days of John the history of the Royal Navy can be traced without interruption. In John's day also, began that glorious series of naval successes, that brilliant list of naval commanders, and that sequence of historic ship-names, which combine to make the British Navy of to-day unique in the antiquity and grandeur of its memories and traditions. Salisbury defeated the French at Damme in 1213; and in the reign of John's successor, Henry III., Hubert de Burgh defeated Eustace the Monk off the South Foreland in 1217, and, by a victory won against great odds, prevented an invasion of the country. In 1293 Sir Robert Tiptoft crushingly defeated Charles, Comte de Valois, in mid-channel. Under Edward III. the Navy again made great strides. The age produced many gallant captains, including Sir Walter Manny, Sir Robert Morley, Sir William Trussell, Sir William Clinton, Sir John Howard, Sir Robert Holland, and Richard FitzAlan. It also saw, for the first time since the Conquest, an English king commanding in person in a general naval action, and winning a complete victory. Edward with, as we should now say, his flag in the Thomas, fought the bloody battle of Sluis in 1340; and he conveyed the news of his glorious success to his son in England, in the earliest naval dispatch that still survives among our records. Edward III., moreover, had a personal share in the victory known as "L'Espagnols-sur-Mer," which was won off Winchelsea in 1350; and one of the ships of the fleet in that action was commanded by the Black Prince. Among the ship-names of that early period, the only ones which survive in the Navy to-day are Falcon and Rose; and even they are at present borne only by non-effective vessels. Rose dates from before 1299; Falcon, from before 1350. Perhaps, too, George, which dates from before 1345, ought to be considered as surviving; for we have both a St. George and a Prince George in the Navy List. Of other pre-fifteenth-century names there are Garland, Edward, Plenty and Welfare. There were ships called Garland in the Navy during the best part of 600 years; and it is to be regretted that, since the long French wars, so venerable and historic a name has been allowed to die out. In the sixteenth century the name was often written Guardland; and it thus assumed a new appropriateness.

After the days of Edward III. the Navy suffered an eclipse; but it renewed its glories under Henry V. In his reign the battle of Harfleur was won by John, Duke of Bedford, and Sir Walter Hungerford in 1416; and John, Earl of Huntingdon, defeated the French on St. James's Day, 1417. Of the ship-names dating from the fifteenth century we have now in the Navy only Bonaventure, Sovereign (if we accept Royal Sovereign as an equivalent), and Swan, though through many generations Ann, James, Katherine and one or two more survived. After the death of Henry V. there was another eclipse, from which the Navy emerged for ever, soon after the accession of the House of Tudor, in 1485. Then came the day of commanders like Sir Edward Poynings, Lord Edward Howard, Lord Thomas Howard, Sir William FitzWilliam, and John, Lord Lisle, and of such actions as those off Brest in 1512 and 1513, and the one at Spithead in 1545. From the first half of the sixteenth century date the ship-names Lizard, Swallow, Salamander, Antelope, Swift, Unicorn, Lion, Dragon and Phœnix, which survive to-day; besides Tiger, Greyhound, Mary Rose, Hind and Hare, which were retained until comparatively recent times, and which certainly deserve revival. So we come to the golden age of Elizabeth, and to the exploits, fights and voyages of Howard of Effingham, Drake, Hawkins, Frobisher, Essex, Raleigh, Cumberland, Winter, and many more. The still surviving ship-names which date from the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth are as numerous as they are glorious, and they include Victory, Warspite, Repulse, Dreadnought, Swiftsure, Defiance, Triumph, Revenge, Rainbow, Mercury, Scout, Speedwell, Crane, Cygnet, Eagle, and Talbot. They should also include other names which have not been long dropped from the list, such as Vanguard, Hope, Merlin, Foresight, and Spy.

The reigns of the early Stuarts added little to the naval triumphs of England, but they saw at least two capable naval leaders, Monson and Pennington; and they added to our list of surviving names Hector, Dolphin, Leopard, Crescent, Lily, Dove, and Hart. Under the Commonwealth the achievements of the Navy comprised the many hard-fought battles of the First Dutch War, the conquest of Jamaica, the repression of Moorish pirates, and the daring deed at Santa Cruz in 1659; and they are illustrated by such names as Robert Blake, William Penn, George Ayscue, George Monk, and Richard Deane. The period gave to the Navy, among ship-names which still survive, Renown, Centurion, Fox, Pembroke, Seahorse, Pearl, Bramble, and many of those which are borne by small craft. After the Restoration came the victories of the Second and Third Dutch Wars, associated with the exploits of Prince Rupert, James, Duke of York, Albemarle, Sandwich, Sir Robert Holmes, Sir John Lawson, Sir Christopher Myngs, Sir William Berkeley, Sir John Harman, Sir Thomas Allin, Sir Joseph Jordan, and Sir Edward Spragge. Very many existing ship-names naturally date from that eventful age. Among the most important of them are Britannia, St. George, Neptune, Edgar, Grafton, Northumberland, Resolution, and Rupert. One might also add Royal Oak, although there was an Oak under the Commonwealth.

The period beginning with the Restoration of 1688, and ending with the death of Queen Anne, witnessed the battles of Bantry Bay, Barfleur, La Hogue, Santa Marta, Vigo Bay, and Velez Malaga, and the capture of Gibraltar and Minorca. The heroes of those and other naval events of the times were Arthur Herbert. Edward Russell, John Narbrough, George Rooke, John Benbow, John Leake, Clowdisley Shovell, Thomas Dilkes, John Norris, Charles Wager, and George Byng. From the accession of George I. to the death of George II. the naval successes at or off Passaro, Porto Bello, Louisbourg, Finisterre, Havana, Quebec, Lagos, and Quiberon Bay, and the names of Vernon, Anson, Warren, Pocock, Hawke, Knowles, Watson, Saunders, and Boscawen shine conspicuous. Next came the glorious reign of George III., within the sixty years of which were fought the battles of St. Vincent (Rodney's), the Saintes, the Doggersbank, the Glorious First of June, Lorient, St. Vincent (Jervis's), Camperdown, the Nile, Copenhagen, Algeciras, Trafalgar, San Domingo, Basque Road, Lissa, Algiers, and many more; when colonies were added to the British Empire by the exertions of the Navy in all parts of the world; and when Napoleon, perhaps the greatest leader the world has ever seen in any age, found himself brought to his knees by the slow but certain coercion of the sea power of Great Britain. To catalogue the great commanders of those sixty years would need a page of this book. At the head of them would stand Nelson, Hood, Howe, Jervis, Rodney, Barrington, Keppel, the Parkers, Duncan, Hughes, Hotham, Collingwood, Warren, Saumarez, Strachan, Duckworth, Cochrane, Hoste, and Exmouth, but there would be dozens of names scarcely less celebrated to follow. Since then, happily, there has been a long era which, on the whole, has been peaceful; but even in that age of peace Navarino, Saint Jean d'Acre, Bomarsund, Sebastopol, Fatshan Creek, the Peiho, and Alexandria stand out, and with them such names as those of Codrington, Stopford, Napier, Lyons, and the Seymours. These are a few of the headings under which the naval history of Great Britain during seven hundred years is written, and should be read.

In that long period the methods of administration have undergone enormous changes, though not so many as may, perhaps, by some be imagined. In John's reign, the chief of the civil government of the Navy, under the king, was the Keeper of the King's Ships, who was then generally a priest, and who was the administrative ancestor of the official who was later called Clerk of the Ships, Clerk of Marine Causes, Clerk of the Navy, or Clerk of the Acts, and who is now Secretary of the Admiralty. In early days the administration of the Navy seems to have been shared by this official with the Admiral-in-Chief for the time being, and with the King's Chancery; but in 1546 the whole system of naval administration was revolutionised by the establishment of a Navy Board, to see to the finances, inspection, manning, gunning, and, eventually also, to the victualling and sanitary condition of the Navy. The Navy Board existed, with various modifications, until 1830, when the entire military and civil management of the service was concentrated in the Board of Admiralty. This latter Board had, however, existed long before. It represented the Lord High Admiral, an official of great antiquity and honour, who for many years was, under the king, the supreme head of the service. Sometimes, after 1628, his office was placed in commission; but it still exercised the executive power. To-day the Board of Admiralty, besides representing, and doing the work of, the old Lord High Admiral and of the old Navy Board, exercises wider functions still, and assumes the supervision of naval education, of the dissemination of naval intelligence, and of much more. It is, in fact, the general staff, the commander-in-chief, the commissariat, the strategical brain, the engineer, the builder, the manufacturer, the inventor, the schoolmaster, the accountant, the victualler, the chemist, the hydrographer, the Parliamentary representative, the lawyer, the doctor, and the spiritual head of the Navy, one and indivisible. The present constitution of the Board of Admiralty is regulated under an Act of 2 Will. and Mary, sec. 2, cap. 2, and another of 2 Will. IV., c. 40, and by an Order in Council of March 19, 1872, modified by another of March 10, 1882; and the Board now consists of the First Lord, who is commonly a civilian and a member of the Cabinet; the First Sea Lord, who is commonly an officer high up on the flag-list; the Second Sea Lord; the Third Sea Lord, who also holds the office of Comptroller; a Junior Sea Lord; and a Junior Civil Lord. To this body are attached a Parliamentary and Financial Secretary, and a Permanent Secretary, the representative of the old Keeper of the Ships.

It has been said that the Board of Admiralty is one and indivisible. This is true in the sense that the First Lord is responsible for everything that is done by his colleagues as well as by himself; but it is not intended to imply that the ordinary duties of the various members of the Board are in any sense confused. On the contrary, the functions of each are pretty clearly defined. For example, subject to the general approval of the First Lord, the First Sea Lord takes charge of discipline, naval intelligence, technical education, hydrography, and ships in the reserve; the Second Sea Lord takes charge of the Marines, mobilisation, manning, naval schools, engineers, and the personnel of the reserve; the Comptroller takes charge of ship construction, dockyards, materials, coals, and expense accounts; the Junior Sea Lord is responsible for transport, surgeons, victualling, stores, the regulation of table money, &c., and the education of young officers; the Junior Civil Lord takes charge of works, of questions affecting pay and allowances, and of the administration of Greenwich Hospital. The duties of the Financial Secretary are obvious. The Permanent Secretary superintends all correspondence in the name of the Board, prevents the various departments from acting independently, provides for the execution of the Board's orders, and secures the general continuity of the work of successive administrations.

The estimated expenditure on the Navy during the current financial year is a little more than 23¾ millions sterling (£23,778,000). This enormous sum is about equal to the total annual revenues of Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Greece, Bulgaria and Servia combined. The cost of the Navy has, indeed, never been so great, even in war time, as it is now. About the year 1410 it was well below £50,000; under the Commonwealth its maximum in any year was £809,000; in 1691, when we were in the midst of a fierce war with France, it was only £670,000; in 1760 it was no more than £432,000; by 1780, in the midst of the struggle with France and the revolted American colonies, it was but £1,083,000;[1] in 1794, at the outbreak of the French Revolutionary War, it was £5,525,000. Even in 1805, the year of Trafalgar, it was only £15,035,000. It is to-day, in peace time, more than half as much again, and the fact may well seem portentous to some people. But there are two sides to the question. In 1656-57, when the prudence of Cromwell led him to strain every nerve to make the Navy of his country great and powerful, he did not hesitate to spend £809,000, out of his country's total revenue of only £1,050,000 upon the fleet. Results show that he acted wisely. He devoted for a short time the startling proportion of four-fifths of his entire supplies to improving his naval defences. At the present time, if we spent in proportion, we should be devoting, not twenty-three, but about eighty-four millions sterling to the fleet. Happily, we are never likely to be again called upon to spend in anything like that proportion; but those of us who may be tempted to think that, in spending three-thirteenths of our resources upon the Navy, we are spending too much, will do well to remember that 250 years ago, when four-fifths of the revenues were temporarily given to that object, the investment was proved by the course of subsequent events to have been a wise and even necessary one.

The personnel of the Navy has, like everything else relating to it, seen many changes. There is evidence that, in early days, a few men made the Navy their life's career, and sometimes brought up their sons to the same profession. But those men were only the navigators and seamen of the royal ships: they were not the fighting force. It was the soldier who served as captain; the sailor navigated under him, and simply placed the ship where the soldier wished her to be. This arrangement endured, with very little modification, up to the time of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, and it did not entirely disappear until the end of the seventeenth century. Lord Thomas Howard was primarily a soldier. The same may be said of Essex, and later of Blake and Monk. But, as early as Lord Thomas Howard's time, a new race of men had sprung up; men who were fighting sailors by profession. Among the earliest and most notable of these were FitzWilliam and Winter. Gradually the new race increased, until it held nearly all active naval commands, to the exclusion of the race of soldiers. It did not follow, however, because the new men knew how to sail and handle a ship, that they always did sail and handle their own vessels. The duties of a naval captain are very numerous and complex, and they always have been so. The navigators, therefore, survived, in spite of the fact that the captains had themselves become navigators; and, even in the present day, while the captain directs everything, there are officers specially assigned to the navigation of each ship, and others specially assigned to the conduct of her fighting forces in action.

From what has been said it follows that the navigators are the oldest body of strictly naval officers. In the earliest times they were called "Rectors" and "Masters." The term rector died out five hundred years ago. The term master, still carrying much of its old meaning, survived in the Navy till the middle of the present reign; and, even after the abolition of the title, the officer remained, and still remains, under the name of Staff-Commander or Navigating Lieutenant. But more lately the extinction of the Staff-Commanders and Navigating Lieutenants has been decreed. The officer exclusively qualified for navigating purposes is being allowed to die out. In his stead we now utilise an ordinary executive officer, who is assigned to specially devote himself to navigating duties. Whereas, therefore, fifty years ago a battleship was navigated by a Master, and fifteen years ago by a Staff-Commander, she is now navigated by a Commander, R.N., who, as an indication that he is temporarily borne for navigating duties, has an "(N)" placed after his name in the second part of the "Navy List." This combining of functions has given satisfactory results. It is obviously better to have in the position of navigator an officer who has also a practical working knowledge of guns, torpedoes, signals, steam, and tactics, rather than one who is a navigator only. At a pinch, the former could take the place of a Captain or of a Commander killed or wounded in action. If the principle were carried further, and if, instead of bearing engineer officers, accountant officers and Marine officers in our ships, we bore ordinary naval officers, assigned for engineering, accountant, and Marine duties respectively, the service would be the gainer. This development has already been suggested, and to some slight extent followed out, in the United States and elsewhere.

Connected with the department of the Master, who in the old days was only a warrant officer, was another warrant officer, who still survives as such—the boatswain, who is the oldest of what used to be called "the standing officers." He had charge of rigging, sails, boats, etc. The other standing officers of those days—also warrant officers—were the purser, the carpenter, the gunner, and the cook. They were called standing officers because they had charge of the ships in ordinary, and because they remained attached to such ships, whether the vessels were in commission or not. The purser has now blossomed into the paymaster, and has become a commissioned officer; the carpenter and gunner remain as they were; and the cook has fallen from his ancient greatness, and no longer holds a warrant. Like the pursers, the surgeons originally held only warrants, but to-day, not only the paymasters, but also the surgeons and the engineer officers rise in time, like the executives, to commissioned rank. The oldest of the commissioned officers are, however, the admirals, captains, commanders and lieutenants. They now all begin their active career with warrants as midshipmen, and get their first commissions on being appointed lieutenants. The lieutenant, in his modern sense, existed in the Navy before the days of the Armada. He seems afterwards to have disappeared, and to have been revived under Charles I. He obtains promotion, by selection, to the rank of commander, or, as it was formerly called, master and commander, and the commander, a rank which dates from the third quarter of the seventeenth century, also obtains promotion, by selection, to the rank of post-captain. But captains who become flag officers are promoted, not by selection, but by simple seniority, subject to their having served at sea for a specified time in post rank. This was not always so. A letter of Prince George of Denmark, Lord High Admiral, distinctly sets forth that in the time of Queen Anne the Crown appointed its flag officers also by selection; and it would be an excellent thing for the service if that sensible practice could be reverted to, although the change might possibly bear hardly on individual officers. Commanders of ships began to be called captains about the year 1350; but there were no captains, in the modern sense of the word, until after that rank of officers had been made into a permanent body by the adoption, in 1674, of the principle of half-pay in peace time. The title of admiral appears to date in England from 1297, when William de Leybourne was officially styled "Admiral of the Sea of the King of England." Several undoubted commissions of admirals survive from the reign of Edward III. The office, though not the name, of Lord High Admiral seems also to have been instituted under Edward III., when the command of all the fleets of England was first centred in a single officer. The antiquity of the naval chaplain is quite as great as this, but, at first, chaplains were not borne for individual ships but for whole fleets; and, until comparatively recent times, the social position of chaplains on board ship was very different from what it is now.

Regular provision for the retirement of captains upon a pension was first made in 1747, when a certain number of senior captains, most of whom were too old for active service, were retired with the rank of superannuated rear-admirals and pay at the rate of 17*s.* 6*d.* a day. A retired list for captains as such, at 10*s.* a day, was established in 1786; and in 1796 it was provided that fifty senior lieutenants might be superannuated at 6*s.* a day, with the rank of commander, and that certain other lieutenants might be pensioned at 5*s.*, and yet others at 2*s.* 6*d.* a day. Further regulations for the retirement of flag officers were made in 1851, 1866 and 1870; for the retirement of captains in 1847, 1851, 1860, 1864, 1866 and 1870; for the retirement of commanders in 1840, 1851, 1856, 1860, 1864, 1866 and 1870; and for the retirement of lieutenants in 1816, 1851, 1856, 1860, 1864, 1866 and 1870.

At the time of Trafalgar a naval officer's full pay, apart from table money or extra allowances, when these were granted, was per day—admiral, £3 10*s.*; vice-admiral, £2 10*s.*; rear-admiral, £1 15*s.*; captains, 8*s.* to £1, according to rate of ship; commanders, 8*s.*; lieutenants, 5*s.* The rates now are—admiral, £5; vice-admiral, £4; rear-admiral, £3; captains, £1 2*s.* 6*d.* to £2 5*s.*; commanders, £1; and lieutenants, 10*s.* to 15*s.*

Until the present system of continuous service for seamen was adopted in 1852, the Admiralty had to raise men as best it could, and as necessity from time to time demanded. It offered bounties; it made use of impressment; and it had to obtain thousands of inexperienced landsmen, who, until they had been for some time afloat, were practically useless. The demand for men varied, of course, enormously. In 1694 it was 40,000. Then, after great fluctuations, it rose in 1756 to 50,000; in 1760 to 70,000; in 1780 to 85,000; in 1783 to 110,000; and during part of the year 1801 to 135,000. Whenever a peace occurred and the need relaxed, thousands of men were thrown upon the country without employment or prospects. It is not, therefore, to be wondered at that service on the lower deck of a man-of-war was extremely unpopular. To make matters worse, ships' complements were often eked out by means of the sweepings of gaols; the men were badly cared for, and were seldom allowed to go on shore; and the system of punishments facilitated tyranny and barbarism. Now all is changed. For the current financial year, 100,500 seamen, Marines, and boys are voted, an increase of about fifty per cent. over the number for ten years ago. These men are taken into the service as boys, and are taught to consider the Navy as a career, which, if they behave well in it, will deal handsomely by them. They are educated not merely for their peculiar duties, but also for the general duties of citizens. They have set before them all kinds of inducements to become proficient and to rise in their profession; and they are assured a moderate pension after deserving service. It is not a fact that, with our present fleet, these 100,500 seamen, Marines, and boys would suffice to fully man all such of our ships as we should desire to send to sea in war time; but they would suffice to man eighty or ninety per cent. of our serviceable vessels. To supply the balance and make good casualties, we would look to the body known as the Royal Naval Reserve, which is composed of officers and men who belong to the mercantile marine, but who have received from time to time a certain amount of naval training, and who have periodical opportunities for serving at sea with the fleet. It may be that we ought further to raise our force of seamen and Marines until we have enough men to man every craft which in war we should desire to man, and that we should look to the Reserve only to make good casualties: for it should always be borne in mind that we cannot to any large extent utilise our existing Reserve without partially depleting the mercantile marine in which the men normally serve. It is a question whether in war time these men would be more useful in the Navy than in fulfilling the duty of endeavouring to bring to the country from abroad those food supplies without which we could not long exist. It is, nevertheless, a subject for congratulation, not only that we now have a greater number of regularly trained seamen and Marines than we ever had before, but also that we have a more competent number of men in proportion to the ships at our disposal, and that the quality of those men is certainly as fine as it ever was. The men, indeed, leave little to be desired. Some slight modifications in their pay, prospects, and food would be to the advantage of the country; but, in the meantime, the men return splendid value for the money expended upon them, and are, upon the whole, if not absolutely contented, at least very proud of their profession. As regards training and physique the men are probably by far the best in the world. The officers of the Navy, it must be feared, are not equally far ahead of their rivals in foreign services. The system of education of the British naval officer is not sufficiently modern to be entirely satisfactory; and the scheme regulating promotion does not sufficiently encourage initiative and keenness or sufficiently discourage indifference and laxity. The material from which the officers are made leaves, however, no reason to suppose that, with improved methods, they would be inferior to any; and, even now, some of our officers certainly outshine all the rest. A necessary reform seems to be the extension of the age of entry in order to allow youngsters to acquire, before going to sea, a little more knowledge of subjects which they afterwards have neither leisure nor opportunities for st' 'ng. But the problem how best to effect a beneficent change is surrounded by many difficulties.

The ships of the Royal Navy of early times were small, leewardly, crank, and quite unfitted for encountering heavy weather. Even at the time of the Armada, when the Navy had already begun to signalise itself in distant seas, none of Her Majesty's vessels exceeded a burden of 1,000 tons, according to the measurement of early days; and very few were of any greater burden than 600 tons, while the majority were not bigger than the sailing barges of the present age. In the two hundred years that followed, the maximum size of ships did not much more than double itself. Nelson's Victory, which was built in 1765, and which at the time of Trafalgar was one of the finest battleships of her day, is only 226 ft. 6 in. long; while the largest British battleships of the present time, those of the Majestic class, measure 413 ft. over all; and we possess in the Powerful and Terrible cruisers which have a length of 538 ft. over all. Again, the beam of the Victory measures but 52 ft. 4½ in, while that of the Majestic is 75 ft., and that of the Powerful 71 ft. The tonnage, by builder's measurement, of the Victory is 2,164. Her displacement at load draught was probably about 3,500 tons. But the Majestic displaces 14,900, and the Powerful 14,200 tons. It may therefore be said, that while in the two hundred years ending with the launch of the Victory we did little more than double the maximum size of our ships, we have since then more than trebled it. But we have, of course, done much in addition. We have substituted iron for wood, and steel for iron; we have displaced sails for steam; we have superseded hand power by steam, hydraulics or electricity; we have made ourselves largely independent of wind and waves; we have introduced armour protection and water-tight compartments; we have so immensely improved the gun as to render it practically a new weapon; and we have invented and perfected an entirely new naval arm, the torpedo. In spite of all changes, however, the gun remains still, as it was at the time of the Armada and at the time of Trafalgar, the principal weapon of the service; and perhaps, therefore, there is no basis of comparison between the ships of the present time and the ships of the past that is so significant as the comparison of their guns and gun power. Let us then look for an instant on these elements of force, as they were exemplified in the Victory which fought against the Armada, and the Victory which fought at Trafalgar, and as they are exemplified in a ship of the Majestic class.

The Victory of the Armada days was a 800-ton ship, mounting twelve 18-pounders, eighteen 8-pounders, nine 6-pounders and three 1-pounders, or forty-two guns in all. The weight, therefore, of a double broadside of shot as thrown from her batteries was 417 pounds. Nelson's Victory mounted twenty-eight 32-pounders, twenty-eight 24-pounders, forty-four 12-pounders, and ten 12-pounder carronades, or, in all, 110 guns and carronades. The weight of her double broadside of shot was thus 2,226 lbs. The Majestic mounts four 12-in. 46-ton breechloaders, twelve 6-in. quick-firers, sixteen 12-pr. quick-firers, twelve 3-pr. quick-firers, and eight Maxim automatic machine guns, or fifty-two guns in all, besides two guns for service ashore, and five torpedo tubes. The weight of shot thrown by a single discharge from all her mounted guns is 4,826 lbs. But the mere comparison of 4,826 lbs. with 2,226 lbs. and with 417 lbs. by no means shows the extent of the advance made in the weight-throwing capacity of the ships. The Armada Victory in the space of three minutes could not, it is estimated, discharge more than 1,200 lbs. weight of metal; Nelson's Victory in the same period could not discharge more than 8,500 lbs. weight; but the Majestic, owing to improved methods of loading and working guns, can discharge in the same space of time at least 24,000 lbs. weight.

renewed a little later, we had France and Spain as our opponents; and the mobile serviceable forces then pitted one against the other were, as nearly as can be ascertained:—

	Gt. Britain.	France.	Spain.	Total Allies.
"Fighting ships"	126	52	47	99
"Scouting ships"	161	70	29	99
"Mosquito craft"	114	32	60	92
	401	154	136	290

We possessed, according to this calculation, an advantage over our combined foes of 26 per cent. in "fighting ships," of 62 per cent. in "scouting ships," and of 23 per cent. in "mosquito craft." In mere number of ships of all kinds we had an advantage of 38 per cent. This was the superiority which, increased as the war went on, enabled us, though not without difficulty, to emerge victorious from a contest with the second and third naval powers of the Europe of that day. It becomes interesting to examine how, estimated upon corresponding principles, our position stands now. The figures of the "Naval Pocket-Book" for the fleets of the five leading naval powers of Europe give the following results:—

	Gt. Britain.	France.	Russia.	Italy.	Germany.
"Fighting ships"	110	65	43	30	32
"Scouting ships"	147	69	32	35	26
"Mosquito craft"	146	58	74	85	58
	403	192	151	150	116

It will be seen at a glance that France and Russia form the strongest combination of two Powers that can be arrayed against us. They have together 110 "fighting ships," as against our 110; 101 "scouting ships," as against our 147; and 132 "mosquito craft," as against our 146. Judged in this way, then, our position, as against the two strongest naval powers in Europe, is very considerably worse than it was in 1801, when we had fought the French Republic for nine years and were about to fight the French Empire and its allies for twelve years longer. In "fighting ships" we had an advantage of 26 per cent.: that advantage has now disappeared and has given place to equality. In "scouting ships" we had an advantage of 62 per cent.: that advantage has now fallen to 45 per cent.; and in "mosquito craft" we had an advantage of 23 per cent.: that advantage has now fallen to 10 per cent. Upon the whole number of ships, irrespective of class, we had an advantage of 38 per cent.: that advantage has now dwindled to about 17 per cent. In each case the figures given include ships building as well as those actually built, though they do not include vessels which are as yet merely projected. As against France alone we are relatively much stronger than we were in 1801, but in 1801 there was only a single other European nation, viz., Spain, that belonged to what might be called the second rank of naval powers. There are now four such nations, so that the chances of a formidable naval combination being created against us are proportionately greater than they were at the beginning of the century.

Yet, in spite of the unsatisfactory nature of this conclusion, our position in fact is in some respects even worse than our position on paper. We have, it is true, a greater proportion of thoroughly trained men to work the fleet than any other Power possesses; and our ships are, upon the whole, probably, of somewhat superior quality. But, on the other hand, we have among our battleships a considerable class which is entirely unrepresented in other navies, ships which are still mainly armed with obsolete muzzle-loading guns. Moreover, we have far wider maritime interests to protect than France and Russia together; and, whereas their decisive defeat at sea would still leave either of them defensively strong and absolutely independent, our decisive defeat at sea would be the signal for the ruin of the British Empire. In a word, while for either France or Russia a strong navy is to some extent a luxury, for Great Britain a supreme navy is a vital necessity. At present we do not possess a navy which can be called supreme.

The universal supersession of sails by steam as the motive power of vessels of war has revolutionised the condition under which naval campaigns must be fought. Since the introduction of ironclads, breechloading guns, and torpedoes, there has never been a naval war in which large fleets for considerable periods have been searching for, or seeking to avoid, one another. In old days fleets left Spithead and cruised self-contained for months, sometimes without so much as sighting a British port. All they needed in the way of stores and gear, if it could not be found upon the station, could be sent to them at any time, and taken on board at leisure as opportunity served. Such supplies as were then carried were not rapidly exhausted. Six months' provisions and water, and two or three months' beer, or a year's wine or spirits, could be easily stowed. Fresh ammunition, even in war time, was not wanted every day; and, moreover, as much of it could be put into the magazines as would suffice for two or three big actions. Nor did the ships of those days need frequent docking. If they were very foul, and no docks were available, they could, upon occasion, be beached and scraped as they lay upon the mud or sand of some sheltered bay. Above all, the ships of those days did not need large and frequent supplies of coal. But now all is different; and a fleet cannot leave Spithead and cruise for so much as a single month, even at the lowest possible speed, without needing fresh supplies, and without having to go into some protected anchorage ere she can take them on board. In war time, too, that anchorage, if a frequented one, must be also a fortified one, lest the ship be taken at a disadvantage and be attacked by her foe while she is temporarily incapable of full resistance. The most urgent of supplies are coal, and, in war time, ammunition. Either, therefore, there must be protected depôts of coal in numerous convenient spots scattered over the world's surface, or there must be provision for sending fleets to sea accompanied by large and fast colliers furnished with facilities for rapidly coaling ships at sea or in any sheltered position. There must be also equally numerous depôts of ammunition, or, in default, ordnance store vessels, capable of accompanying fleets at their highest speed; for, in action, a ship mounting guns of the types which are now all but general in modern navies, can, and probably would, empty her magazines in a few hours, and would then be almost entirely useless until she could replenish them. Again, there must be docks, for not only do modern ships lose their speed much more rapidly than the old ones, owing to fouling, and not only is it impossible to beach modern ships without risking their destruction, but also ships whose hulls have been seriously injured in action cannot be rendered fit for any sort of service until they have been dry-docked.

It is not, therefore, sufficient for a world-embracing Power like Great Britain to have ships and men in plenty, to have good guns and torpedoes, and to have as much coal and ammunition as she needs. She must also be able to lay her hands upon her coal and ammunition when and where she needs them, and to dock her ships when and where she may want to. She must be able to do this, too, with a reasonable certainty that, while doing so, she will not be caught at a disadvantage by her enemies. Colonel Sir George Clarke once made very merry in the columns of the Nineteenth Century over an assertion that the British Navy was almost entirely dependent upon its bases. The gallant officer is a type of a very large number of people who appear to believe, because they do not soberly consider the point, that a man-of-war is a much as she ever was a self-contained unit. Nothing could be more wide of the fact. She is no more a self-contained unit than is a man in the fighting line of a big army on shore. He must be supplied from time to time with cartridges from the rear, seeing that he cannot carry with him more than enough for a few hours' desultory firing; he must, after a day or two in the field, be fed from the outside; and, if he be badly injured he must be attended to from the outside, ere he can be made fit to resume his place in the ranks. In addition, so long as from any cause he be disabled, he must be protected from the outside, or he may fall into the hands of the enemy. The truth is that naval war on a large scale has become, more even than land war, an affair of bases. The base is by itself of little use; the ship is by itself of little use for long; but with adequate bases, and not without them, a fleet that is in itself superior to another may fully assert and maintain that supremacy for a practically indefinite time. The requisites of an efficient naval base are, therefore, suitable position, sufficient stores of coal, ammunition, and supplies, suitable docks, and proper protection both against bad weather and against a sudden foe. A sudden foe is advisedly specified.

If a navy be in itself a superior one, it should be able to protect its bases against deliberate blockade or slow methods of reduction. But no navy, however strong, can save an ill-protected base against surprise attack by raiding enemies.

The regular naval bases of the British Navy are not very numerous, and can be quickly glanced at. Outside Great Britain there are, in the Mediterranean, Malta and Gibraltar; in the East Indies and China, Hong Kong and Trincomalee; in Africa, Ascension and Capetown (Simon's Bay); in America and the West Indies, Halifax, Bermuda, Jamaica and Esquimalt; and in Oceania, Sydney. In addition, there are such coaling stations as Singapore, Colombo, Bombay, Aden, Mauritius, Zanzibar, Sierra Leone, Melbourne, etc. But these are not exclusively in naval hands, many of them having no docks whatsoever; and probably at very few of them are there supplies of ammunition for a fleet in war time. Of docks that would take a second-class cruiser, such as the Dido, 350 ft. long by 54 ft. broad, there are at Malta three, at Gibraltar none (but three building), at Hong Kong two, at Trincomalee none, at Ascension none, at Capetown one, at Halifax one, at Bermuda one, at Jamaica none, at Esquimalt one, and at Sydney three; total twelve. Of docks that would take a battleship such as the Majestic, 413 ft. long by 75 ft. broad, there are at Malta three, at Hong Kong two, at Capetown one, at Halifax one, at Sydney one, and at the other regular naval bases none; total eight. These are the meagre naval docking resources of the British fleet on foreign stations. At no single station are there, at the bases, more than three docks that would take even a second class cruiser. No doubt private docks in more or less unprotected ports would supplement these in war time; but docks lose half their value for warships when they are unprotected, and when they are not at regular naval bases, close to the stores of government coal, ammunition and supplies generally. It is, however, usually admitted that we have not enough naval docks abroad; and to insist upon the point is perhaps to thrash a sufficiently beaten horse. The Government excuses the situation by showing us, from year to year in the estimates, how fearfully expensive a business is the construction of such large stone graving-docks as have lately been built at Portsmouth, and are now building at Gibraltar. But this is, after all, begging the question. It is not necessary, nor perhaps even desirable, to have large stone graving-docks at any of our naval bases. Steel floating docks are much less costly, can be built more rapidly, and can, if it be desirable, be moved from threatened positions to better protected ones. For what the two new docks at Portsmouth have cost, we could have had five or six even larger floating docks, such as the one which has lately gone to Havana. Yet, with one exception, the British Admiralty does not own a single floating dock of large size. That one is the only dock—a very old one—existing at Bermuda. The floating dock is available at all states of the tide; can take in a vessel which has a bad list, or one which is at more than her normal draft; and can, if necessary, so place itself in a stream as to easily receive a ship which could not safely enter any fixed dock the mouth of which lay at right angles to the current. In addition, the floating dock can be towed from port to port, or to any position where it may be temporarily required.

Perhaps it is because the Government has been over anxious to create works of a very permanent character that it has not made more progress towards the perfection and multiplication of our naval stations abroad. It would surely be worth while for the Administration to consider whether, if it cannot within a short period give us expensive stone docks, elaborate fortifications, capacious coaling jetties, and other accessories of a first-rate naval base, it cannot, by a compromise, give us something which, while less costly, shall be nevertheless serviceable and efficient. The suggestion of floating instead of stone docks indicates one direction in which trial might advantageously be made. A Government which shrinks from the expenditure of vast sums upon fortifications might also prudently consider whether it would not be wise to adopt for naval defence the relatively cheap mobile railway heavy batteries which, two or three years ago, were advocated by Herr Waldemar Lilliosvic. Finally, seeing that the multiplication of coaling bases is expensive, and that coaling bases to be efficient must be fortified, why does not the Government solve the problem by establishing a well thought out coaling organisation, and by building, for service with the fleet, a number of large and very fast colliers, which, supplied with Temperley transporters, could generally find some lee under the protection of which they might coal our men-of-war, even far from ports or bases?

THE ARMY.

In early times in England every citizen between the ages of fifteen and sixty, capable of bearing arms, was compelled to arm himself and fight for his country, whether against civil aggressors or foreign enemies. After the introduction of the feudal system holders of land by the tenure of knight service were bound to attend the king at their own expense, mounted and armed, with retainers for each knight's fee of land. Those who were unable to serve (including women and clergy) either found substitutes or paid a composition.

Feudal service was limited to forty days in each year, until Henry II. required a number of knights to be equipped and maintained for a longer period. "Scutage" or "Escuage," a money composition to avoid service, was introduced about 1156, and was afterwards regularly levied by Parliament, but was abolished during the Commonwealth. The general levy still continued and a certain quota from each county were called out, those not called on having to supply them with arms and provisions. This developed into a sort of tax on the country which continued till recent times. During the reigns of the Tudors impressment became very common, but in 1640 an Act was passed declaring impressment illegal. The value of trained bands, or "Militia" as they are now called, and the necessity for exercising and arming them, was recognised by the Long Parliament. There were also in existence ever since the Conquest a certain number of "mercenaries" or men who made a regular profession of bearing arms. At the Restoration in 1660 a great change occurred in the history of the Army. Knight service with all its incidents was abolished by the Act which turned all tenures into free and common socage, and the general levy became organised into Militia under the authority of Parliament, a standing army being thereby formed.

At the close of the great Civil War in the middle of the seventeenth century the troops were all disbanded, and Charles II., on his return to England in 1660, raised several corps which form the foundation of the present army.

Some few regiments can, however, trace their origin to forces existing before this time, and many independent companies maintained by their captains were afterwards amalgamated into regiments. The "Yeomen of the Guard" and "Gentlemen-at-Arms" remained as in the days of Henry VIII. The Royal Scots, for instance, is supposed to have descended from the old Scottish Guard of the French kings, and existed as a regiment in 1633. It only came to England, however, in 1661, from which date its seniority is reckoned. Colonel Monk's regiment, now the Coldstream Guards, was raised in Scotland in 1650, but only marched across the Border from Coldstream in January, 1660. The Grenadier Guards were raised later in 1660, and another regiment brought over from Holland was joined to it five years after, and the combination was styled the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, but it was decreed by the King that "our own Regiment of Foot Guards shall be held and esteemed the oldest regiment." The Coldstream were then called the "2nd Foot Guards," but later "The Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards." The Scots Guards were formed in Scotland also in 1660 by the Earl of Linlithgow.

The Household Cavalry Regiments originally existed as a number of troops, variously designated. Charles II. organised in Holland two troops which he brought to England with him, a third troop being raised shortly afterwards. From them the "Royal Regiment of Horse," now the Royal Horse Guards, was formed in 1661, its colonel being the Earl of Oxford and its uniform blue, hence known as "The Blues."

The 1st Tangier or Tangerine Regiment, raised in 1661 for service in Tangiers, later on became the 2nd Foot, now the Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment. It was called "the Queen's" and given the badge of the "Paschal lamb" (that of the Royal house of Portugal) in honour of Charles II.'s wife, Catharine of Braganza, Tangiers having formed part of her dowry.

A "Maritime regiment" was raised in 1664, and at first called the 3rd Regiment. But the "Holland Regiment," formed from various corps existing in Holland, on its return to England in 1665 took its place as the 3rd Regiment, and was called the "Buffs" from the colour of its facings. The standing army at this time consisted of some 8000 men.

In 1677 Grenadiers, or Granadiers, were first introduced into the service, and though the Grenadier Guards were not so styled till after defeating the French Grenadiers at Waterloo, yet a squad of men was first formed in the Foot Guards for being trained in this particular service. Evelyn, in his diary in 1678, remarks:—"Now were brought into service a new sort of Soldiers called Granadiers, who were dextrous in flinging hand granados, every one having a pouch full; they had furr'd caps with coped crownes like Janizaries, which made them looke very fierce, and some had long hoods hanging down behind, as we picture fools. Their clothing being likewise pybald yellow and red."

About this time companies were usually 100 strong, consisting of thirty pikemen, sixty matchlock men, and ten fusiliers.

Various troops of cavalry used during the occupation of Tangiers in 1662-84, and known as "the Tangier Horse," were on their return to England formed into a regiment, which now survives as the 1st Royal Dragoons; and in 1680 a second Tangier Regiment was formed, which afterwards became the 4th Foot.

The 2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys) existed on the Scotch establishment in 1681, as the "Royal Scots Dragoons." They were originally dressed in grey and rode white horses.

At the death of Charles II. (1685) there was a standing army of 8000 to 10,000 men. The Duke of Monmouth's rebellion in that year necessitated great additions being made to it. Six "Regiments of Horse," now known as Dragoon Guards, were raised, but their numerical titles were several times altered. The "Queen Consort's Own" and the "Princess Anne of Denmark's" Regiments of Dragoons were also formed, now respectively the 3rd and 4th Hussars. Several infantry regiments were also raised at this time, including an "ordnance regiment," consisting of twelve companies of Fusiliers and one of miners, to guard the guns during battle (two companies had garrisoned the Tower of London some time before); this eventually became the 7th Royal Fusiliers, while others became respectively the 8th King's Liverpool Regiment, 9th Norfolk, 10th Lincolnshire (whose uniform was blue till 1688), 11th Devonshire, 12th Suffolk (though some of its companies were of older standing), 13th Somersetshire, 14th West Yorkshire, and 15th East Yorkshire.

The Militia were also called out at this period, and the Oxfordshire and the Somersetshire regiments received between them the reward offered for the capture of the Duke. James II. insisted upon keeping up a standing army of over 20,000 men, declining, even after the suppression of the rebellion, to disband the force raised to cope with it.

William III. on coming to England from Holland in 1688 brought with him two regiments, afterwards known as the 5th Fusiliers and 6th Foot, and added more regiments, including the "10th Horse" (now the 7th Dragoon Guards), the 16th Bedfordshire, 17th Leicestershire, 18th Royal Irish (though existing from 1683 on the Irish establishment); and during the next year the 19th Yorkshire, 20th Lancashire, 21st Royal Scots Fusiliers (though on the Scotch establishment in 1678), 22nd Cheshire, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, 24th South Wales Borderers, 25th King's Own Scottish Borderers, and 26th Cameronians, the 27th Inniskillings being added the year after.

In 1689 the Bill of Rights declared that no standing army could be legally maintained without the authority of Parliament. In the same year, it being obvious that a standing army was a necessity, the first Mutiny Act was passed. It authorised a standing army being kept up for a year, and it allowed military law to be applied to that army. The Act has been annually renewed, but the necessity for its renewal is a well-known constitutional safeguard. From this period the history of the army as a constitutional force may be said to commence.

In 1691 the forces amounted to 65,000 men, and the 28th Gloucestershire was raised in 1694, as were the 29th and 30th, though the latter two were disbanded four years after.

The Fusilier "cap," a tall, mitre-shaped hat, was introduced about this period, and worn by the Royal Fusiliers and Scots Fusiliers, and by the Grenadiers of each regiment, other soldiers wearing the three-cornered hat.

Most of the regiments existing at this time took part in the war against the French in Flanders, the Royal Irish particularly distinguishing itself at the siege of Namur, hence its motto, "Virtutis Namurcensis Præmium."

Another era in the history of the British Army begins in 1700, when Marlborough received the command of the allied forces in the war of Spanish Succession. Parliament voted supplies for 58,000 troops and for 40,000 sailors and marines. Six regiments of marines were organised in 1702 for service off the coast of Spain, which afterwards became the 30th, 31st, 32nd, 35th and 36th Foot, while other infantry regiments were formed which became 29th, 33rd, 34th, 37th, 38th and 39th. In April, 1704, Marlborough embarked for Flanders, and in August was fought the memorable battle of BLENHEIM, in which the French and Bavarian armies were defeated. The battle of RAMILLIES, two years later, compelled the French to evacuate Spanish Flanders, and in 1708, when the French, under Vendome, tried to retrieve it, they were totally defeated at OUDENARDE. The battle of MALPLAQUET in the following year was the most sanguinary of all, when the allies to the number of about 80,000 attacked the French entrenchment in a wood, and eventually drove them off the field. Pikes were abolished in the British Army almost immediately after this victory.

In 1715 six regiments of "Dragoons" were formed, numbered from 9 to 14, and clothed in scarlet, though now changed to 9th Lancers, 10th Hussars, 11th Hussars, 12th Lancers, 13th and 14th Hussars respectively.

Artillery was first formed as a special branch of the Army in 1716. Before that time guns were attached to infantry battalions (usually two to each), but in that year two companies of artillery were permanently formed at Woolwich. During the next year a corps of Royal Engineers was also established, and a regiment was raised in Nova Scotia which afterwards became the 40th Foot.

In 1719, a regiment of "Invalids" was formed from old soldiers of the Guards, which eventually became the 41st. Other regiments of "Invalids" were also raised.

The 42nd Royal Highlanders was formed from various independent companies in Scotland, being first assembled as a regiment in 1739. The dark colour of the tartan worn (which has since been altered to that of Athole) is said to have given rise to the sobriquet of "Black Watch."

Ten Marines regiments were formed during the period 1740–1748, which were in turn changed to infantry of the line.

The battle of DETTINGEN was fought in 1743; when George II. commanded in person the English forces against the French, this being the last occasion on which an English king has held command in the field; and the Duke of Cumberland was worsted by the French at Fontenoy in 1745, but next year he succeeded in defeating the Young Pretender at Culloden.

In 1746 the regiments of Horse were reorganised, the first three becoming the 1st (or King's), the 2nd, and the 3rd Dragoon Guards; the next in order being called the 1st, 2nd (or Green), 3rd, and 4th (or Black) Irish Horse.

The army at this period only amounted to about 18,000 men.

Numbers were allotted to the infantry regiments in 1751, which had hitherto mostly been known by the names of their respective colonels. Six years after this the 50th and 51st American regiments were disbanded, and all the junior regiments, 52nd to 62nd, were put back two numbers in their designations.

In 1756 a scare of a French invasion caused a revival of the national force in a new shape. It was enacted that a certain number of men were to be chosen by ballot in each county; they were to be under the command of the Lord Lieutenant, and not liable to leave their county, except in case of invasion. They were called out annually for training, and were then paid and were subject to the Mutiny Act. They are not now chosen by ballot, as 59 Geo. III. suspended the ballot in favour of voluntary enlistment. But by the Suspending Act the Queen in Council is empowered to direct a ballot if necessary, and if in any year the Suspending Act were not renewed the ballot would at once revive.

In 1758 the expedition to Cape Breton culminated in the capture of LOUISBURG, in which Wolfe so distinguished himself. Ten more infantry regiments were formed in that year from the 2nd battalions of the 3rd, 4th, 8th, 11th, 12th, 19th, 20th, 23rd, 24th, and 31st regiments, and were numbered from 61 to 70. In 1759 Wolfe with 5000 men gallantly captured QUEBEC from the French. The 15th Hussars was raised as a regiment of Light Horse in 1759, as also were the 16th (Light Horse), 17th (originally 18th Light Dragoons), and 18th (originally 19th Light Dragoons), though these latter three were disbanded in 1821. The 17th were raised by Colonel Hale, who had just brought home the despatches announcing the capture of Quebec and the death of Wolfe. The uniform was scarlet, but in commemoration of the hero's death an edging of black and white was added, and the motto, "Death or glory." About this period English troops were first sent to India, where the 39th took part in the battle of PLASSEY under Lord Clive.

Meanwhile the Seven Years' War was disturbing all Europe, and in 1759 an English force co-operating with the Hanoverians defeated the French at MINDEN and other places.

The 71st, 72nd, 73rd (from 2nd Battalion of the 42nd), 74th and 75th Regiments were raised in Scotland between 1777 and 1787. The 76th and 77th were also raised in the latter year for service in India.

The War in America was prosecuted by the king against the advice of his ministers and wholly in opposition to the wish of the nation; it was unpopular throughout and proved disastrous to the British there employed, who were trained entirely on the rigid drill of Frederick, most unsuitable to the occasion.

The Cavalry was again reorganised in 1788, when the three regiments of Household Cavalry were styled 1st and 2nd Life Guards and Royal Horse Guards, and the four regiments of Irish Horse then took their present titles of 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th Dragoon Guards.

In 1793–4, when the war in Flanders began, fourteen more infantry regiments were formed and given numbers from 78 to 92; of these the 78th, 79th and 92nd were raised in Scotland, the 88th in Ireland, while the 81st was formed of the Lincolnshire Militia, who volunteered to become regulars. At LINCELLES on August 18th, 1793, three battalions of Foot Guards under General Lake, in all 1,200 men, attacked a position held by 5,000 to 6,000 French troops and completely routed them, capturing ten cannon.

In 1799 the wars against Hyder Ali and his successor Tipu Sahib in MYSORE was brought to a conclusion by the taking of SERINGAPATAM by storm.

In 1800 the "Rifle Corps" was instituted; two years later it was made the 95th Foot, while in 1816 it became the Rifle Brigade.

In 1801 the expedition sent to Egypt under Abercromby defeated the French at ALEXANDRIA. All the regiments then engaged were given the badge of "the Sphinx, superscribed EGYPT." The 28th Gloucestershire Regiment have the additional distinction of wearing the Sphinx on the back as well as on the front of their caps in memory of their gallant behaviour when attacked in front and rear at the same time during this engagement.

Hussar regiments were first formed in 1806, when the 7th, 10th, and 15th were organised as such.

The CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, which had been taken by Admiral Elphinstone and General Clarke in 1795, was restored under the provisions of the Treaty of Amiens in 1802; in 1806 it was again occupied by an expedition under General Baird and Admiral Popham, to be finally ceded to Great Britain in 1814.

The action of MAIDA was fought in Calabria in July, 1806, when the French under Regnier were totally defeated by General Stuart.

The island of MARTINIQUE was recaptured from the French in 1809, GUADALOUPE being also retaken in the next year.

The system of drill had now undergone various changes. Hitherto the infantry had been formed in three ranks, but now it became reduced to two. More attention had also been given to the commissariat and transport arrangements.

The great Peninsular War commenced in July 1808, when Wellington landed with a British force of 10,000 men to assist the Spaniards in driving out the French from Spain and Portugal. He was successful at ROLEIA and VIMIERA and then returned home. Disasters to the Spanish troops caused Sir John Moore, with 25,000 men, to retreat under very difficult circumstances to CORUNNA, when a great battle was fought in January 1809, and the French driven off with a loss of 2000 men. After the death of Moore, Wellington again took command. The passage of the DOURO was shortly followed by the victory at TALAVERA. But want of supplies and failure of Spanish co-operation caused Wellington to fall back to BUSACO, where he successfully repelled the French attacks, and finally to Torres Vedras, where he took up a fortified position.

An advance was made in 1811, the French being again repulsed at FUENTES D'ONOR in trying to relieve Almeida, and Badajoz was invested. The siege had to be raised, however, owing to want of support, and the British fell back to CIUDAD RODRIGO, which was carried by storm in January, 1812. BADAJOZ was again invested and captured in April, and on the 22nd July the great battle of SALAMANCA was fought, when the French were completely routed and 7000 prisoners were taken. Next year a further advance was made, and another great victory gained at VITTORIA, for which the Duke of Wellington was made Field-Marshal. Crossing into France the battle of the PYRENEES was fought, and San Sebastian was, after two attempts, carried by assault, with a loss of 2300 in killed and wounded. The battles of the NIVELLE and the NIVE followed, and in February, 1814, Soult was defeated at ORTHES, and in April Wellington attained the final victory of the war at TOULOUSE.

Gold medals were issued in commemoration of this war, but were only awarded to general, staff, and commanding officers.

The return of Napoleon from Elba was the signal for a renewal of operations, and Wellington took command of the allied forces in Belgium, where, after the battle of QUATRE BRAS, the great battle of WATERLOO was fought on June 18th, 1815.

Napoleon's army numbered over 70,000 men with 240 guns. The allies slightly less, of which 25,000 were British troops, the remainder Dutch and German, with about 156 guns. The two armies were arranged opposite each other, and after some skirmishing the French advanced to the attack towards midday, made a feint towards the right, and at the same time made a determined attack on the left of the allies' position. This was repulsed, but after a preliminary cannonade, Ney advanced against the left centre with 20,000 men. He was, however, attacked in turn by Picton's brigade and the British cavalry, and driven back. He renewed the attack later on, but about this time, Napoleon, learning that Blucher's German army was arriving to Wellington's support, determined to make a grand effort to break up the English before they could be reinforced. Two columns of French Guards were thrown against the British but were hurled back, and the Germans arriving on the battlefield completed the defeat of the French, who then precipitately fled. The total loss to the allies is put at 23,000, that of the French 18,500 killed and wounded.

British forces remained in occupation of Paris till 1818.

In 1822 the Army consisted of 72,000 men.

The Kaffirs in SOUTH AFRICA gave trouble in 1834-5, when three British regiments were required to quell the disturbances. But in 1846-7 further operations had to be undertaken, and in 1850–53 war again broke out, and a more extensive campaign had to be undertaken.

The first Afghan war broke out in 1838, when the British force took GHUZNEE after a hard fight, and entered CABUL; but on retiring back to India in January, 1842, great difficulties were encountered and frequent attacks made by hill tribes, so harassing that the whole force became broken up, and all were killed or taken prisoners, and out of 26,000 persons, including followers, only one returned to tell the tale. A relief expedition again went to Cabul and took it.

The first Sikh war in the Punjab was conducted by Sir Henry Hardinge, with one cavalry and four infantry regiments, in 1845. The enemy were routed at MOODKEE and at FEROZESHAH, and again at ALIWAL by Sir Harry Smith, and were finally defeated at SOBRAON. Troubles, however, soon arose again, and a second expedition had to be sent. Shere Singh, with 40.000 men, was defeated by Lord Gough at RAMNUGGER, which was shortly followed by the undecisive battle of CHILIANWALLAH, January 1849, and the final overthrow of the Sikhs at GOOJERAT, where 60,000 Sikhs and Afghans were put to flight.

In 1853 an expedition was sent to Burma against the King of Ava, resulting in the capture of PEGU and other strongholds.

War was declared against PERSIA in November, 1856, and troops landed at Bushire. Lieut.-Gen. Sir James Outram later on brought a larger force from India. Actions were fought at BUSHIRE, KOOSH-AB and RESHIRE.

The army at this period had increased to 100,000. In 1847 the so-called short service was introduced. Hitherto enlistment had usually been for life, except when unusual levies were required for special campaigns; but it was now reduced to a service of ten or twelve years, with power to re-engage to complete twenty-one years. In 1851 28,000 Minie rifles were taken into service, but two years afterwards the Enfield rifle was adopted.

Another epoch in the annals of the army was entered upon when the troubles in the East culminated in the declaration of war between Russia on the one hand and Great Britain, France, and Turkey on the other. The allied forces landed, unopposed, on the coast of the Crimea in September, 1854. The British force, under Lord Raglan, consisted of 1000 cavalry, 26,000 infantry, and sixty guns, the French being slightly more numerous, and the Turks numbering about 7000.

The force landed consisted of four divisions:—

The Right Division, Sir G. Brown.—Major-Gen. Codrington, 2nd Battn. Rifle Brigade, 7th Fusiliers, 19th Regt., 23rd Fusiliers; Brig.-Gen. Buller, 33rd Regt., 77th Regt., and 88th Regt.

The First Division, Duke of Cambridge.—Major-Gen. Bentinck, Grenadier, Coldstream and Scots Fusilier Guards; Sir Colin Campbell, 42nd, 79th and 93rd Highlanders.

The Second Division, Sir de Lacy Evans.—Brig.-Gen. Pennefather, 30th, 55th and 95th Regts.; Brig.-Gen. Adams, 41st, 47th and 49th Regts.

The Third Division, Sir R. England.—Sir John Campbell and Brig. Eyre, 1st Royals, 28th, 38th, 44th, 50th, 68th Regts., and part of 4th Regt.

The Fourth Division, Sir George Cathcart.—20th, 21st and 63rd Regts. (46th and 57th to join).

The Cavalry Division, Lord Lucan.—Light Brigade, Lord Cardigan, 4th Lt. Dns., 8th H., 11th H., 13th Lt. Dns., 17th Lrs.; Heavy Brigade, Brig.-Gen. Scarlett, 1st R. Dns., Scots Greys (joined later), 4th Dn. Gds., 5th Dn. Gds., 6th Dns.

The first battle was fought a few days after on the heights above the river ALMA. A flank march was then made to Balaklava, round the Russian position at Sevastopol.

Having secured a base at Balaklava, measures were taken to invest Sevastopol, and the bombardment commenced. On 25th October the Russians advanced into the valley of BALAKLAVA; their cavalry charged down on the Turks and scattered them, but their coming upon the 93rd Highlanders, drawn up in line, were obliged to turn back. The Heavy Cavalry Brigade then made their brilliant charge into the masses of Russian horsemen and completely routed them. The troops were all formed up for a concentrated advance, when the unfortunate order was conveyed to Lord Lucan to send forward the Light Cavalry Brigade, and the glorious but disastrous charge followed. The engagement continued, but without any decided result. On 5th November, at 5 o'clock in the morning, began the battle of INKERMAN, when the Russians advanced in force to attempt to drive off the allied forces. The fighting was obstinate, repeated charges with the bayonet being made, while the rain and fog prevented the generals manœuvring their men, and added to the confusion. At last, however, the Russians were driven off. The brigade of Guards lost nearly 40 per cent. in killed and wounded in this battle. No further active operations could be undertaken without reinforcements, and the winter was passed under the greatest hardships, the commissariat, and especially the medical supplies, being very insufficient. Early in April the bombardment of Sevastopol was again commenced, but failed in its object. On 18th June a combined attack only resulted in a loss of 5000 men, on 16th August a more successful assault was made, but on 7th September the disastrous attack on the Redan, in which the determined attacks of the British were repulsed, but which resulted in the Russians retiring during the night. Peace was signed at Paris on 29th March, 1855. During the war the British forces lost no less than 381 officers and 20,425 men killed or died of wounds or illness (mostly the latter), while 504 officers and 11,361 men were wounded.

Early in 1857 various evidences of widespread discontent were noticed in India. The Enfield rifle with its greased cartridges had just been served out to the native troops, and has been assigned as the origin of the Mutiny. On 23rd April the 3rd Native Cavalry at Meerut refused, in a body, to touch the cartridges, and the ringleaders were imprisoned, but on 10th May all the native troops broke out in open mutiny and shot down their officers, and the mutineers marched to Delhi. Nana Sahib of Bithoor placed himself at the head of the rebels, and in June, General Wheeler surrendered to him at Cawnpore, where, repudiating the terms of capitulation, Nana ordered a general massacre of Europeans.

The small force of British officers and soldiers (mostly 32nd), with a few faithful followers, amounting to about 1000 Europeans and 700 natives, and 1300 non-combatants, were besieged at Lucknow on 30th June till 25th September, when Havelock and Outram arrived with reinforcements consisting of about 2700 British and 400 native troops, including detachments of 5th Fusiliers, 64th, 78th Highlanders, 84th, 90th Light Infantry. In November Sir Colin Campbell arrived to the relief of LUCKNOW with the 9th Lancers, 8th, 23rd, 53rd (part), 75th and 93rd Highlanders, and a naval brigade, and certain native contingents, amounting in all to some 5000 men.

Operations against the city of DELHI continued from May to September, when the city was captured.

Operations were continued under Sir Hugh Rose during 1858 in CENTRAL INDIA, chiefly against Jhansi, Calpee and Gwalior. After the Mutiny all the troops belonging to the East India Company were transferred to the Government.

Towards the close of 1857 began the Chinese War, and by the end of the year CANTON had been taken. Operations were then conducted on the Peiho river, and the TAKU FORTS captured, but as the Chinese Government refused later on to ratify the treaty that had been made, they were again successfully attacked in 1860, under Sir James Hope Grant, with the assistance of the French. An advance was then made, and, after several engagements, PEKIN was reached in October 1860 and taken possession of.

On 12th May, 1859, the Volunteer Force was brought into existence by a circular of the Secretary for War. There had at various times been corps of Volunteers raised during special emergencies, but these had been disbanded when the danger had passed. In 1860 the Volunteers amounted to 119,146 men, but of them 12,700 were non-efficients. In 1897 they numbered 231,914 with only 6381 non-efficients.

In May, 1859, notice was given by the War Office that the Government would receive, through the Lords Lieutenant of counties, proposals as to the formation of Volunteer corps throughout the country. In 1863 the Volunteers were placed under the control of the Lords Lieutenant, and it was enacted that they should only be called out in case of actual or apprehended invasion, and when so called out should be subject to military law.

The Maoris rose against their British rulers in NEW ZEALAND in 1860, and inflicted severe losses on the small forces, but Maj.-General Pratt, on arriving with reinforcements, defeated the rebels at Mahoetaki. Operations continued, however, for some time before all the "prahs," or strong stockaded forts could be reduced.

In 1865 the Enfield rifle was replaced by the Snider.

In 1868 an expedition was sent to ABYSSINIA, consisting of about 4000 British and 8000 Indian troops, under Sir Robert Napier. After a month's march the formidable stronghold of Magdala was carried by assault on 13th April. For his brilliant conduct of the campaign General Napier was created Lord Napier of Magdala.

After the great Franco-Prussian War attention was directed to the many deficiencies of the British Army, and many schemes were introduced for improving it. Lord Cardwell, in 1871, introduced the localisation of the infantry regiments, the linking of battalions, the introduction of short service, and a reserve, and the abolition of purchase of officers' commissions. The changes were further developed during the next ten years. Each regiment was deprived of its number and given a local standing and a name. There were 141 battalions in the Army, forming 109 regiments, of which the first 25 had two battalions each, the remainder one only (except the 60th and Rifle Brigade, which had each four battalions). This arrangement was now altered, and all the regiments after the 25th became so mixed up by pairing off battalions, mixing up their badges, and adding together the battles, that they have become almost unrecognisable, and the confusion caused by their complicated titles has been often severely commented upon.

The Martini-Henry rifle was served out to the troops in 1871.

King Coffee, of ASHANTEE, gave trouble in 1873, when Sir Garnet Wolseley, Colonel Evelyn Wood, and Major Baker Russell were sent out to raise native regiments. But it was eventually found necessary to send out British troops, who arrived at the beginning of 1874. A severe engagement took place at Amoaful, and soon after Coomassie was captured.

The refusal of the Ameer of AFGHANISTAN to receive a British mission necessitated the despatch, in November, 1878, of four divisions to invade the country. The 1st Division, under Sir Samuel Browne, advanced through the Khyber Pass, capturing the fort of ALI MUSJID. Major-General F. Roberts, in command of the Kuram Valley Force, took from the enemy the strong position on the PEIWAR KOTAL. The death of the Ameer, Shere Ali, changed the aspect of affairs, and his son, Yakoob Khan, concluded peace and allowed a British Resident, Sir Louis Cavagnari, to go to Kabul. However, in September, 1879, the mission was attacked and the Resident and his staff murdered; operations had to be in consequence immediately resumed, and Sir F. Roberts started from Ali Khuyl with 6000 men and won a battle at CHARASIAH. On 6th October KABUL was occupied, but after various attacks by the enemy a better position was taken up outside the town at SHERPUR, on which a very determined attack was made on 23rd December. Meanwhile Sir Donald Stewart was sent to occupy Kandahar, whence he marched to aid the force at Kabul, encountering the enemy and defeating them at AHMED KHEL, and continued his march to Kabul. Brigadier-General Burrows moved with a column in July, 1880, from Kandahar to oppose a force of Afghans advancing from Herat, but was broken up at Maiwand and retreated to Kandahar, where the troops under General Primrose were besieged by the enemy. Sir F. Roberts thereupon started on his great MARCH FROM KABUL to their relief. He started on 8th August with 10,000 men, and on 31st entered KANDAHAR, and next day attacked the enemy who had retired to a strong position near by, and completely defeated them.

In 1877 troubles again arose in SOUTH AFRICA which continued to 1879, when the Zulus, under the chief Cetewayo, necessitated Lord Chelmsford invading their country. The terrible disaster at ISANDHLWANA occurred on 22nd Jan., when the 24th Regt. and some artillerymen were annihilated by an overwhelming force of Zulus. But this crushing defeat was atoned by the gallant defence of ROREKE'S DRIFT by Lieuts. Chard and Bromhead, who, with less than 100 men, kept at bay a whole Zulu impi, and preserved the colony for their country. At the end of March Lord Chelmsford defeated the enemy at GINGHIHOO, and finally, on 4th July, at ULUNDI. Sir Baker Russell was afterwards despatched with a column to capture and destroy the stronghold of the powerful chief Sekukuni.

The disastrous operations in the Transvaal in 1880, when a force under Gen. Colley was surprised and routed at Majuba Hill, at all events taught us many lessons, though it is always to be regretted that the British force was not allowed to avenge their reverses.

In 1882 Arabi Pasha led a revolt against the Khedive in EGYPT, which the English Government decided to suppress. This resulted in the bombardment of ALEXANDRIA in July by the British fleet under Sir Beauchamp Seymour (Lord Alcester). A force was then landed under Sir Archibald Alison, and a month later Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived with an expedition which proceeded to the Suez Canal and landed at Ismailia. After the affair at Kassassin a night march was made across the desert and the line of TEL-EL-KEBIR attacked and carried, after which the cavalry pressed on and occupied Cairo the next day.

Two years later the forces of the Mahdi, having annihilated the Egyptian force under Hicks Pasha, threatened the town of Suakim, and defeated another Egyptian force under General Valentine Baker. A British force was thereupon sent under General Graham, which landed and defeated the Soudanese at EL TEB and TAMAI.

When General Gordon, who had been despatched to withdraw the troops from the Soudan, was surrounded and besieged at Khartoum, a British expedition was despatched under Lord Wolseley to affect his release. This force started up the NILE in September, 1884, made a desert march from Korti, encountering and driving off the enemy at ABU KLEA, and again at ABU KRU. Sir Herbert Stewart, who commanded this column, died of the wounds he received during the latter engagement. A small detachment was sent up to Khartoum on two steamers, only to find that the town had fallen. Another column, under Major-General Earle, defeated the enemy at KIRBEKAN, but the general himself was unfortunately killed in the action.

The fall of Khartoum necessitated, in the opinion of the home Government, an expedition being sent to Suakim under General Graham. On March 20th, 1885, an action was fought at HASHEEN, and two days after an attack made on Sir J. McNeill's zariba nearly ended disastrously, but the affair at TOFREK set matters right for the British force. Though the evacuation of the Soudan was then carried out, another engagement took place at GINNISS, where the troops, under Sir F. Stephenson, defeated the enemy.

In 1885 the subjection of King Theebaw, of BURMA, became necessary, and after the capture of MANDALAY a difficult and protracted campaign was carried on against numerous bands of dacoits, who were not entirely overcome till 1889. In spite of this, however, it became necessary to despatch a column to WUNTHRO in 1892.

In 1888 a force was sent under Colonel Graham against the Thibetans at SIKKIM.

In December 1888 the Mahdists in the Soudan again gave trouble, and were beaten by the Anglo-Egyptian force under General Grenfell at GEMAIZAH, and again, nearly a year after, at TOSKI on the Nile.

A number of different operations had to be conducted on the FRONTIERS OF INDIA during the next few years.

The HAZARA operations in the Northern Frontier were conducted in 1888. The tribes of the CHIN-LUSHAI on the Indo-Burmese frontier had to be suppressed in 1889-90. Sir W. Lockhart's expedition against the MIRANZIS in Samana took place the year after. The HAZARA tribes were again dealt with in 1891, and later in the same year was the expedition to MANIPUR on the N.E. Frontier, as well as smaller ones against the HUNZAS and in the LUSHAI HILLS.

From 1891 to 1894 a series of minor operations were conducted at various places on the WEST COAST OF AFRICA. Expeditions went up the GAMBIA in December 1891, against TAMBI in 1892, to TONIATABA, 1892, and against the ZEBUS in the same year; against the SOFAS in 1893 and 1894, and on the GAMBIA in 1894. In most of these only the West India Regiment was engaged, and natives, aided by Special Service officers.

In 1895 the garrison at CHITRAL, to the north of Cashmir, had to be relieved by a force consisting of several columns under Lieut.-General Sir R. Low. This campaign was marked by many gallant and brilliant feats of arms, the defence and relief of Chitral being prominent amongst them.

Another expedition had to be despatched to ASHANTI in December 1895, which, however, met with no opposition on its way to Coomassie, where King Prempeh was captured. Prince Henry of Battenberg, who served as a volunteer, contracted fever during the operations and died January 20th, 1896.

Several actions were fought by native troops under British officers in EAST AND CENTRAL AFRICA from 1891 to 1894.

When the rising of the natives in RHODESIA in 1896 proved too strong for the local police to cope with, some British troops were dispatched and succeeded in subduing the rebels, though posted in country most difficult for the conduct of operations.

In the autumn of 1897 three different expeditions had to be undertaken to punish tribes on the N.W. FRONTIER of India. The TIRAH force, under Sir W. Lockhart, consisting of two divisions (under Brig.-General Symons and Maj.-General Yeatman-Biggs), in all about 30,000 men; the TOCHI Field Force, under Major-General Bird, with two brigades (Brig.-Generals Egerton and Brook); the MALAKAND Field Force, under Maj.-General Blood, with two brigades (Brig.-Generals Meiklejohn and Jeffreys). The compaign was concluded before the end of the year, but arrangements were completed for further operations against the AFRIDIS, who still showed inclinations of resisting, in the spring of 1898. Sir William Lockhart, however, who succeeds Sir George White as Commander-in-Chief in India, summoned a meeting of chieftains, and after deliberation, the latter tendered their absolute submission, thus rendering further operations unnecessary. This success was only attained after a considerable loss of officers and men, owing to the difficulties presented by the geographical features of the country, as well as by the nature of the operations.

In October 1897 a 3rd battalion was raised for the West India Regiment, and on 1st December a 3rd battalion was formed for the Coldstream Guards.

Early in 1898 Major-General Sir H. Kitchener, Sirdar of the Egyptian Army, who, since the autumn of 1896, had recovered the provinces of DONGOLA and BERBER, considered it necessary to ask for a British force to co-operate with the Egyptian expedition being conducted against the Khalifa. Accordingly, a British brigade, under the command of Major-General Gatacre, was sent up to Berber, and on April 8th the Anglo-Egyptian Army, consisting in all of some 13,000 men, with 24 guns and 12 Maxims, attacked the dervishes, who were occupying a strongly entrenched position near the ATBARA, and completely routed them. This victory, particularly welcome in its demonstration of the power of organisation exercised by British officers, forms one of the final steps towards the final overthrow of the Khalifa, and paves the way for the more complete vindication of the failure of the operations which culminated in the fall of Khartoum.

In 1898 a further increase of the Army was authorised; a third battalion is to be added to the Scots Guards, and arrangements are to be made for the establishment of two additional line battalions for the Royal Warwickshire Regiment, the Royal Fusiliers, and the Lancashire Fusiliers; certain important innovations were also made with regard to the re-enlistment of discharged soldiers, and a new scheme was formulated in connection with the pay of the rank and file. A great deal of correspondence has been published in the Press on these and other topics, and notable speeches have been delivered by the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary for War.

(b) Indian Forces consist of regiments formed almost entirely of natives permanently stationed in India. They are subject to the Indian Articles of War. A certain proportion of the officers are English, and they are subject to the Army Act. Officers of the British Army, after two years' service, of which one must be in India, and a further period of probation, are eligible for commissions in the Staff Corps of one of the Indian presidencies. Officers so commissioned leave their regiments, and are employed in any military or civil post under the Government of the Presidency.

(c) Colonial Forces are of two kinds: The forces raised by the Government of a Colony, and the forces raised in a Colony by order of Her Majesty (forming part of the Regular Forces). Of the former kind are the permanent forces of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, &c. Of the latter kind of Colonial Force, the West India Regiment, the Royal Malta Artillery, and the Hong Kong Regiment are examples; their pay and maintenance are voted annually by the Imperial Parliament.

The first code of military law was contained in the Mutiny Act (1689), which continued to exist, with various additions, until 1879, when the Army Discipline and Regulation Act was introduced, which in turn gave way to the Army Act of 1881. "Articles of War" may also be made by the Sovereign.

Courts Martial are of three kinds, General, District, and Regimental, as well as a Field General C.M. on active service. A General Court Martial can impose a punishment of death, penal servitude, or imprisonment.

Naval and Military Precedence.

Under this heading we have to consider (1) the various grades in the Navy, (2) those in the Army, (3) the comparison of these two services grade by grade, and (4) the like comparison of both with those holding civilian offices. In all cases the precedence of officers holding the same rank is determined by seniority; and if here again there is an exact equality, the seniority of a previous appointment may determine.

I. THE NAVY.—In this service there are recognised two branches—the Military and the Civil. Under the Military Branch the various grades range as under:—

Admirals of the Fleet.	Lieutenants.
Admirals.	Navigating Lieutenants.
Vice-Admirals.	Sub-Lieutenants.
Rear-Admirals.	Chief Gunners.
Commodores.	Chief Boatswains.
Captains.	Gunners.
Staff-Captains.	Boatswains.
Commanders.	Midshipmen.
Staff-Commanders.	Naval Cadets.

Each ship must on all occasions be represented by one of the Military Branch, and in the absence of the Captain, such representative will be determined by the order of the preceding list of his subordinates, except only that Staff-Captains and Staff-Commanders are in this case taken after Lieutenants. A Captain will also be rated as higher than a Commodore if senior to him in captaincy.

The Civil Branch take rank as follows, both as considered by themselves and as compared with the Military grades shown to the right:—

Inspectors-General of Hospitals and Fleets.	=	Rear-Admirals.
Secretaries to Admirals of the Fleet. Paymasters-in-Chief. Chief-Inspectors of Machinery. Deputy-Inspectors-General of Hospitals, &c. Inspectors of Machinery of 8 years' seniority.	=	Captains of 3 years seniority, the relative positions being decided in Secretary's case from date of his holding that appointment as against the Captain's date of completing 3 years; in case of next three, from dates of commissions on both sides; and in case of the last, from date of his completed 8 years as against that of the Captain's completed 3.
Secretaries to a Naval Commander-in-Chief, of 5 years' seniority. Inspectors of Machinery of under 8 years' seniority.	=	Captains of under 3 years' seniority (Secretary's position being reckoned from close of his 5 years).
Secretaries to Commanders-in-Chief, of under 5 years' seniority. Fleet Surgeons. Fleet Paymasters. Fleet Engineers. Naval Instructors of 15 years' seniority.	=	Commanders, the Secretary ranking from commencement of service as such (cp. above Secs. to Adms. of Fleet), the next three from date of commission, and the Instructor from close of his 15 years.
Secretaries to junior Flag Officers, Commodores of 1st class, or Captains of the Fleet. Staff Surgeons. Staff Paymasters. Naval Instructors of between 8 and 15 years' seniority. Staff Engineers.	=	Lieutenants of 8 years' seniority, the Secretary dating from time of holding that office (again cp. above), the three staff officers from date of commission, and the Instructor from dates of his and the Lieutenant's completed 8 years.
Paymasters. Chief Engineers.	=	Follow immediately after preceding.
Secretaries to Commodores of 2nd class. Naval Instructors under 8 years' seniority. Surgeons. Assistant Paymasters of 12 years' seniority. Engineers of 6 years' seniority.	=	Lieutenants of under 8 years' seniority, according to date of commission, but the last two on left counting from close of their respective 12 and 6 years.
Assistant Paymasters of between 6 and 12 years' seniority. Engineers below 6 years' seniority.	=	Follow immediately after preceding, the Assist. Paymaster counting from close of his 6 years.
Assistant Paymasters under 6 years' seniority. Assistant Engineers.	=	Sub-Lieutenants, according to commission.
Chief Carpenters.	=	Immediately after Sub-Lieutenants.
Carpenters. Head Schoolmasters.	=	Immediately after Boatswains.
Clerks.	=	Midshipmen (from date of passing).
Assistant Clerks. Engineer Students.	=	Naval Cadets (from date of entry).

Chaplains take no rank in the Navy, but hold precedence as clergymen on shore (contrast under "Army"). The Chaplain of the Fleet is head of the Chaplains.

II. THE ARMY.—Officers of the Regular Forces take precedence of those of the Auxiliary, but some of the latter are entitled to rank with the former as youngest of their respective grades. Those of the Yeomanry and Volunteers are counted as on equality with each other. Honorary rank carries precedence, but does not entitle to command or to presidency of courts-martial, &c.

If an officer is placed upon half-pay owing to sickness or wounds, he is, on returning to full-pay, restored to the same precedence which he previously held, but not to the extent of superseding promotions of others made during the interval.

Observing the same division as under the Navy, we have the following sequence of the strictly Military Branch:—

Field-Marshals.	Lieutenant-Colonels.
Generals.	Majors.
Lieutenant-Generals.	Captains.
Major-Generals.	Lieutenants.
Brigadier-Generals.	Second Lieutenants.
Colonels.	Master Gunners.

The Civil Branch, with the relative positions of its grades to those of the Military, is as under:—

Chaplains-General. Commissary-Generals at Headquarters. Commissary-Generals of Ordnance at Woolwich. Directors-General of Army Medical Department. Surgeon-Major-Generals.	=	Major-Generals.
Chaplains, 1st class. Deputy Commissary-Gens. Ditto of Ordnance. Surgeon-Colonels. Veterinary Colonels.	=	Colonels
Chaplains, 2nd class. Assist. Commissary-Gens., and ditto of Ordnance, after 5 years in rank. Commissaries of African Commiss. after same term.	=	Lieutenant-Colonels.

Digitized by Google

Staff Paymasters after 7 years' service. Brigade-Surgeons-Lieutenant-Colonels. Surgeon-Lieut.-Colonels of 20 years' service, or if promoted to rank of Lieutenant-Colonels, but junior to Brigade-Surgeon-Lieutenant-Colonels. Veterinary-Lieutenant-Colonels.	=	Lieutenant-Colonels.
Chaplains, 3rd class. Assist. Commissary-Generals (and of Ordnance) under 5 years' service. Commissaries of African Commissariat of under 5 years' service. Staff Paymasters of under 7 years' service. Paymasters of 10 years' service. Surgeon-Majors of under 20 years' service. Veterinary Majors.	=	Majors.
Chaplains, 4th class. Deputy Assistant Commissary-Generals (and of Ordnance). Deputy Commissaries of African Commissariat. Paymasters of under 10 years' service. Surgeon-Captains. Apothecaries. Captains of Orderlies. Clerks of Works, 1st class. Veterinary Captains. Quarter-Masters of 10 years' full-pay service.	=	Captains.
Assistant Commissaries of African Commissariat. Quarter-Masters. Surgeon-Lieutenants. Veterinary Lieutenants.	=	Lieutenants.

III. RELATIVE RANKS OF NAVY AND ARMY.—The following table gives a more detailed statement than the one supplied in WHITAKER'S ALMANACK :—

Admirals of the Fleet.	=	Field-Marshals.
Admirals.	=	Generals.
Vice-Admirals.	=	Lieutenant-Generals.

IV.—THE NAVY AND ARMY COMPARED WITH CIVILIAN OFFICIALS.—It is perhaps the most striking of the omissions in our general Table of Precedence that no position whatever is allotted to a single holder of Naval or Military rank. In Ireland the General commanding the Forces there is placed after Privy Councillors and before the Irish Attorney-General; whilst some of the various tables which have been published within the past few years (under rules of different Lords-Lieutenant) have added near the bottom, after "Provost of Trinity College," the four Military grades—"Officers commanding Military Districts in Ireland, Deputy Adjutant-General, Deputy Quarter-Master-General, Officers commanding R.A. and R.E. in Ireland." These four grades, however, are not included in the list furnished by the present year's issue of "Thom's Official Directory," and we shall in all probability erase them from our 1899 edition of TITLED PERSONS. In Scotland there is also a total absence of Naval and Military recognition, so that practically all that can be said under this division relates to the rules observed in India and the Colonies.

In the Colonies generally, the senior officer in command of the Troops, if of the rank of a General, and the officer in command of the Naval Forces, if of that of an Admiral, take precedence next after the Governor. If of the rank of Colonel or Lieutenant-Colonel, or of a Naval equivalent, they rank after the Bishop and Chief Justice. If below these ranks, after the Solicitor-General.

In the Diplomatic Service abroad Major-Generals and Rear-Admirals stand immediately before any holder of the joint function of Agent and Consul-General, whilst Brigadier-Generals and Commodores in like manner precede one who is Consul-General only. So, again, Colonels, and Naval Captains of 3 years' standing, precede Consuls; Majors, and Naval Lieutenants of 8 years' standing, precede Vice-Consuls; while Captains in the Army and Naval Lieutenants precede Consular Agents.

In India the Commander-in-Chief comes after the Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab, when these are within their own territories, but takes precedence of them if travelling beyond. The Commanders-in-Chief of Madras and Bombay rank next below the Ordinary Members of the Viceroy's Council, whilst the Commander-in-Chief of the Naval Forces in India is assigned the next position following these, but above them if senior in relative rank. Other Naval and Military officers above the rank of Rear-Admiral or Major-General take their position next after the Puisne Judges of the four High Courts, and before the Additional Members of the Viceroy's Council. Brigadier-Generals follow the Archdeacons of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. At public ceremonies, if the Naval Commander-in-Chief is absent, a distinctive position will be assigned to whoever is the Senior Naval Officer on the spot.

In Canada the Senior Officers commanding the two services will rank next after the Governor-General, if of the grades of General and Admiral respectively; but if of lower degree than these they will come below any officers holding the same who may happen to be serving in the Dominion, these said Generals and Admirals following immediately after Members of the Privy Council not in the Cabinet.

Naval and Military Medals.

No proof is forthcoming of medals being conferred in England for service in the army or navy before the time of Charles I., who, in May, 1643, authorized a badge for such soldiers as might distinguish themselves in "forlorn hopes." This was of silver, and by the warrant dated 18th May, 1643, it was ordered that the "royal image and that of our dearest son, Prince Charles," should be contained thereon. On the 1st June, 1643, a gold medal was ordered for Mr. Robert Walsh, who commanded a troop of horse at the battle of Edgehill on the 23rd October, 1642. The obverse to bear the royal figure and that of his son, Prince Charles. The reverse to have the royal banner, used at the above battle, to be inscribed "Per Regale Mandatum Caroli Regis Hoc Assignatur Roberto Welch Militi." This is the first recorded case of a medal being awarded for military service.

A gold medal was struck, which was oval in shape, to commemorate the battle of Naseby, 14th June, 1645, for officers. On one side was the effigy of Sir Thomas Fairfax, with the inscription "Tho: Fairfax Miles Milit: Parl: Dux: Gen:" The reverse had "Meruisti" within a circle, and the words "Post Hæc Meliora 1645.

The medals given by Cromwell for naval and military services were the first given to officers and men. That for the battle of Dunbar, which is oval in shape and of two sizes in gold and silver, was the first given to the army at large. No grant of medals by the sovereign's command, to officers and men alike, was authorized until the medal for Waterloo was issued.

The medals given by Cromwell for naval services were—1. Oval in gold and silver. Obverse: an anchor, the arms of England (St. George's Cross) and Ireland (Harp), suspended from the beam with a hawser surrounding, and the word "Meruisti." Reverse: a naval engagement, with the words "Service done against six ships July ye XXXI. and August ye I. 1650." 2. Oval in gold. Obverse: an anchor, and three small shields suspended from the beam. Reverse: a sea fight, with the words "For eminent service in saving ye Triumpe in a fight w. y. Duch in July 1653." 3. Oval in silver. Obverse: an anchor and two small shields with the word "Meruisti" above. Reverse: the House of Commons sitting. Cromwell's medal for the battle of Dunbar has on the obverse the head of Cromwell, with the motto "The Lord of Hosts, Septem: ye 3. 1650;" and behind the head is a prospect of the battle. The reverse has the House of Commons sitting, as represented on the great seal of Parliament of 1648, and of the Commonwealth, 1651.

A silver medal was struck to commemorate the victory near La Hogue in 1692. On the obverse are the busts of William and Mary, and the inscription "Gul: et Mar: D.G.M.B.F. et H. Rex et Regina;" and on the reverse two ships in action, with the inscription "Nox: Nulla Secuta Est:"—"Pugn: Nav: Int: Ang: et Fr: 21 May 1692" being in the exergue.

Medals were struck to commemorate the victories of the great Duke of Marlborough, but it is certain they were not worn by either officers or men.

After the battle of Culloden, 16th April, 1746, a medal was struck. Obverse: the head of the Duke of Cumberland. Reverse: a figure of Apollo, and a dragon pierced by an arrow, with the inscription "Actum Est: Ilicet Periit," and in the exergue "Præl: Colod: Ap: XVI. MDCCXLVI." There is, however, no account of these medals having been worn. They were oval: in gold, silver and bronze.

Gold medals were bestowed by Pope Pius VI. on twelve officers of the 12th Lancers for service at Civita Vecchia in 1794.

A gold medal was presented by the Emperor of Germany to each of the officers (8 in number) of the two squadrons of the 15th Light Dragoons engaged at the action of Villiers-en-Couché on 24th April, 1794, by which action the Emperor was saved from being taken prisoner by the French. Only nine of these medals were struck, one being deposited in the Imperial Cabinet at Vienna. Obverse: laureated head of Francis II., Emperor of Germany, and the inscription "Imp: Caes: Franciscus II. P.F. Aug:" Reverse: "Forti-Britanno-in-Exercitu: Foed: ad: Cameracum XX. Apr: MDCCXCIV." In 1798 the King (Geo. III.) permitted these medals to be worn. Crosses of the order of Maria Theresa were subsequently granted to these officers, and permitted to be worn in uniform.

The Nile, 1798, was commemorated by a medal given by a private gentleman, Alexander Davison. Obverse: Peace standing upon a rock holding an olive branch and displaying a portrait of Lord Nelson, with the words "Europe's Hope and Britain's Glory"—behind the figure an anchor, the sea in the distance, and "Rear Admiral Lord Nelson of the Nile." Reverse: the British Fleet sailing into the Bay of Aboukir at sunrise. The words "Almighty God has blessed his Majesty's Arms," and in the exergue "Victory of the Nile, August 1, 1798." The inscription on the edge was "From Alexander Davison, Esq: St. James' Square. A Tribute of Regard." This medal was of gold, silver, bronze gilt, and bronze, and is known as Davison's medal.

Mr. M. Boulton, another private individual, granted a medal for the battle of Trafalgar, 1805. Obverse: bust of Lord Nelson, with the words "Horatio Viscount Nelson, K.B., Duke of Bronte, etc:" Reverse: a representation of the battle of Trafalgar, with the words "England expects every man will do his duty." In the exergue "Trafalgar Oct: 21. 1805," and on the edge was inscribed "To the Heroes of Trafalgar, from M. Boulton." A pewter medal set in a gold rim was also issued for Trafalgar, and the Naval General Service medal was granted for service in Egypt and at Trafalgar long afterwards.

This medal was given on the 1st June, 1847, for the following services:—Maida, 4th July, 1806; Roleia, 17th August, 1808; Vimiera, 21st August, 1808; Sahagun, Benevente, &c., December, 1808, and January, 1809; Corunna, 16th January, 1809; Martinique, February, 1809; Talavera, 27th and 28th July, 1809; Guadaloupe, January and February, 1810; Busaco, 27th September, 1810; Barrosa, 5th March, 1811; Fuentes d'Onor, 5th May, 1811; Albuhera, 16th May, 1811; Java, August and September, 1811; Ciudad Rodrigo, January, 1812; Badajos, 17th March and 16th April, 1812; Salamanca, 22nd July, 1812; Fort Detroit, America, August, 1812; Vittoria, 21st June, 1813; Pyrenees, 28th July to 2nd August, 1813; St. Sebastian, August and September, 1813; Chateauguay, America, 26th October, 1813; Nivelle, 10th November, 1813; Chrystler's Farm, America, 11th November, 1813; Nive, 9th to 13th December, 1813; Orthez, 27th February, 1814; and Toulouse, 10th April, 1814. Clasps inscribed with the names of these actions were also issued, 15 being the greatest number known to have been worn. A clasp inscribed "Egypt" was granted to those engaged in that country, and the medal to those not already in possession of it, by an order dated February 12, 1850. Ribbon: red with blue edges.

The Sultan of Turkey also granted his gold medal for service in Egypt. This medal was of three sizes. The large size for general officers, the second size for field officers, and the small size for captains and subalterns. Obverse; a crescent and star of eight points, surrounded by an ornamental border. Reverse: the Sultan's cypher, under which is the year 1801 in English. Ribbon; orange with hook and chain.

Gold medals were struck to commemorate the battles of Corunna, Talavera, Roleia, Vimiera, the capture of Martinique and Guadaloupe, the battles of Barrosa, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, and Albuhera, and the capture of Java, &c., these medals were only granted to superior officers. Ribbon: red, with blue edges. A separate gold medal was also granted for Maida.

A gold cross was instituted on 7th October, 1813. This is a Maltese cross, in the centre of which is the lion statant. It having been found inconvenient to wear so many gold medals, upon a claim being admitted for a fourth it was substituted by the gold cross with the names of the four engagements engraved thereon, to be worn in place of the previously earned medals, and clasps granted for subsequent engagements to be worn over the cross. The Duke of Wellington had nine clasps over his gold cross. Clasps were also granted to be worn over the gold medal in cases where officers were engaged two or three times. The ribbon for the gold cross and medal was red, with blue edges.

NAVAL GENERAL SERVICE MEDAL, 1793-1840.—This was issued to the navy at the same time as the general war medal was issued to the army, viz., in 1847. Obverse: the head of Her Majesty wearing a diadem, with the words "Victoria Regina." Reverse: Britannia seated on a sea-horse, holding a trident in her right hand and an olive branch in her left. Ribbon: white, with blue edges. Over 200 clasps were issued with this medal, but six is the greatest number known to have been worn with one medal. Amongst the principal naval engagements for which this medal was issued were:—Battle of Camperdown, battle of the Nile, defence of Acre, services in Egypt, battle of Copenhagen, battle of Trafalgar, taking of Curaçoa, action off Gottenburgh, taking of Cayenne, capture of Martinique, capture of Guadaloupe, capture of Java, capture of frigate Chesapeake, battle of Algiers, battle of Navarino, &c. capture of Acre, &c.

These two medals, the general war medal known as the Peninsular Medal, and the Naval General Service Medal were issued so long after the events which they commemorated, that comparatively few of the heroic companions of Nelson, Abercromby, and other famous leaders survived to claim them. The issue was an act of tardy justice to the services which graced the early years of Her Majesty's reign.

The Royal Crest is in the centre, and beneath is an escroll bearing the inscription, "For Valour." Bryant, 6and Foot, obtained this medal and £20 gratuity two years in succession, viz., 1870-71 and 1871-72. Obverse: Queen's head, with the inscription, "Victoria Regina." Reverse: a nude archer, with bow, arrows, and target, pierced in the centre by three arrows, the result of his skill in shooting, his left foot resting on a dais, on which is the figure of Fame in the act of placing a laurel wreath upon his head.—Ribbon: red, with narrow black and white stripes.

MEDALS OF DECEASED SOLDIERS.—These are issued to their next-of-kin on application being made to the Adjutant-General to the Forces, to whom they are directed to be forwarded immediately the soldier becomes non-effective by death. It must, however, be understood that such medals are memorials of the dead, and on no account are they to be worn by the relatives of a deceased soldier.

NAVAL AND MILITARY WORKS

Published by W. THACKER & CO.

The First Large Edition exhausted in a fortnight, a SECOND EDITION is now ready.
16mo., 5*s.* net.

CLOWES' NAVAL POCKET BOOK, 1898. Third Year of Issue. Founded by W. LAIRD CLOWES, Hon. Member of the Royal United Service Institution, Life Member and Gold Medallist of the United States Naval Institute. Edited by L. G. CARR LAUGHTON. The most valuable work of Reference now available, containing a full List of Battleships, Ironclads, Gunboats, Cruisers, Torpedo Boats, a List of Dry Docks, and other valuable information, concerning ALL THE NAVIES OF THE WORLD. Corrected to February, 1898.

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD, in a letter to the Publishers, says:—"It is one of the most useful and handy works of reference on naval matters that I know of, and invaluable to all who take an interest in naval matters."

"Founded in the first instance by Mr. Laird Clowes, the present issue is edited by Mr. Carr Laughton. The information contained upon the navies of the world is most complete and comprehensive, and the 900 pages of printed matter are remarkable for containing so much in so small a compass. To give some idea of the completeness of this volume, we will refer to the little principality of Sarawak with its three vessels, and the republic of San Salvador, which seems to possess only one."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BLAKE OF THE "RATTLESNAKE"; or, the Man who Saved England. By FRED T. JANE. With 16 Illustrations by the Author.

A most thrilling tale of life on board a torpedo destroyer in time of war.

"'Repeat the signal,' said Blake. It was never repeated, however. Scarcely had the lantern began to click afresh, than the stranger opened a tremendous fire upon us and the colliers around her, and as she did so, I saw the flash of a torpedo darting from our tubes amidships. The enemy must have seen it too, for she immediately tried to turn, but it was too late—the torpedo hit her in bow as she circled, and her game was up."

TACTICS AS APPLIED TO SCHEMES. By Major J. SHERSTON, D.S.O., P.S.C., The Rifle Brigade. With Seven Maps, and an Appendix containing Solutions to some Tactical Schemes by Capt. L. J. SHADWELL, P.S.C., The Suffolk Regiment, D.A.A.G. for Instruction.

"Promotion examinations are productive of much heart-burning and many evil thoughts in the minds of the unsuccessful. The preface to the second edition contains one golden rule which ought never to be absent from the mind of the promotion candidate, namely that practical common-sense in dealing with a tactical problem is sure to gain higher marks than any amount of wordy erudition, since 'there is more than one solution' to every problem in tactics. It is a very useful publication indeed."—Broad Arrow.
